I. Questions 1 to 5 are based on the following text.

New swine flu drugs

Scientists in China have discovered that the roots of a plant, which was used during the 1918 Spanish influenza pandemic, contain substances that could be used against the H1N1 (swine flu) virus.

Laboratory experiments have shown that the substances can kill the virus. The plant has a pleasant onion-like taste when it is cooked – but when raw, its sap is so foul-smelling that some people call it the dung-of-the-devil plant.

In the study, Fang-Rong Chang, Yang-Chang Wu and their colleagues note that the plant, Ferula asafoetida, grows mainly in Iran, Afghanistan and mainland China. People used it as a remedy during the 1918 flu pandemic. It is estimated that about 50 million people died from flu during this pandemic.

Up until now, the antiviral compounds of this plant have not been proven scientifically. “We have identified a group of chemical compounds in extracts of the plant that show great potency against influenza A (H1N1) than a prescription antiviral drug available for the flu”, said Chang and Wu. They think that extracts from this plant could be used to develop a new drug against H1N1 flu.

II. Questions 6 to 10 are based on the following text.

Entertaining or promoting substance abuse?

Recent studies have revealed that young people spend about 2.5 hours listening to music. This has become a motive of great concern to many parents not only because of the amount of time spent but because of the kind of music they listen to. Many popular songs contain explicit reference to drug and alcohol abuse. This means that young people can get in touch with many references to substance abuse in only an hour. The exposure to images of young people smoking in films can also be influential. This becomes worse in third world countries; ignorance and poverty also take their stand as the youth are indirectly forced to follow such depicted life styles.

A young single mother interviewed in an alcohol rehab centre confessed that she started abusing alcohol when she started to live as her idol Amy Winehouse. "I could spend hours and hours to find out what she was doing and how I could imitate her. I later found out that she had the habit to abuse on alcohol so I decided to start drinking. I never realised that I was becoming addicted. I started to miss classes and spending nights boozing. It was not only Amy's imitation that ruined my life, some films and songs were all about being free and doing whatever we desired. That also contributed for me falling into the trap".

It is time to do something, we need to be entertained that is true, but for how long should we stay back as we witness our children being silently killed? Being hauled to high risky behaviour? The media and all forms of entertainment should be greatly censored before they are broadcasted.
